Hello,

I must admit that I am rather disappointed with the recent events in the Microsoft anti-trust case. Microsoft was found to be monopolistic, yet part of their punishment is to hand to them on a silver platter a market that Apple has worked very hard to cultivate. We are giving Microsoft absolutely no reason to change their practices. Even after being found monopolistic, Microsoft released Windows XP with invasive activation, and is making great strides toward its dream of software as a service, which I find to be quite alarming.

Thank You,
John Bishop
